The Global Respectful Maternity Care Council, a robust community of maternal health researchers, practitioners, advocates, policymakers and programmers, convened by White Ribbon Alliance, is proud to launch the updated Respectful Maternity Care Charter: Universal Rights of Women and Newborns as the UN Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women presents her report to the UN General Assembly.

A record 128 member states, non-governmental organizations, independent institutions and academics – many of whom are part of the Global Respectful Maternity Care Council – made submissions to the report, titled, “A human rights-based approach to mistreatment and violence against women in reproductive health services with a focus on childbirth and obstetric violence,” providing an excellent opportunity to more fully align the Respectful Maternity Care Charter: Universal Rights of Mothers and Newborns with the human rights laws on which it is grounded.

This work builds on the original Respectful Maternity Care Charter which has raised awareness and created policy change worldwide. The Charter and new set of materials are meant to help you and your partners educate, inform and advocate for all women to receive respectful care during pregnancy and childbirth.

We envision a world where all women and girls realize their right to quality health and well-being.
WHERE WE STARTED

In 2011, the Global Respectful Maternity Care Council released the groundbreaking Respectful Maternity Care Charter, which has been widely recognized as a pioneering document, firmly establishing respectful maternity care as a human right.

WHERE WE’RE GOING

Members of the Global Respectful Maternity Care Council came together to update this charter, which clarifies and articulates the rights of women and newborns while receiving maternity care within a healthcare facility. It delineates how human rights are implicated during the time of pregnancy and childbirth and affirms the basic inalienable rights of women and their newborns. Many of these rights are clearly established in international law and have been interpreted and applied to issues arising during pregnancy, childbirth and in relation to the care provided immediately after birth. These rights are well-known and articulated in separate human rights conventions, however, to affirm adherence to them during pregnancy and childbirth, we have brought them together in one document with that singular focus.

KEY MESSAGES

• Women’s experiences with caregivers can empower and comfort or inflict lasting damage and emotional trauma adding to or detracting from women’s confidence and self-esteem.

• Newborns’ experiences with caregivers also have significant and lasting impact: newborn babies feel pain and discomfort, and can experience emotional distress, particularly when separated from their families in the first hours of life.

• Good early care has a lasting positive impact on the health and well-being of newborns throughout their lives.

• Women’s memories of their childbirth experiences and the treatment of their newborns stay with them for a lifetime, and are often shared with other women, contributing to a climate of confidence or doubt around the healthcare system.
