Demands for Quality Reproductive and Maternal Healthcare from Women and Girls

A CALL TO ACTION

The What Women Want campaign began with a simple idea: ask those who most use reproductive and maternal health services to tell us what they most need.

Ask the clients, ask women.

Through What Women Want: Demands for Quality Healthcare from Women and Girls, more than 350 partners collectively asked over one million women and girls worldwide about their top priority for quality maternal and reproductive healthcare services and brought those demands to health leaders. The goal: generate political commitment, investment and accountability for what women want for their health, as they define it.

Around the world, girls and women are speaking out and demanding change. At its deepest level, What Women Want is a challenge to the power structures which hinder women’s maternal and reproductive health, but most immediately and urgently, it is a resounding call for better quality health services. Let’s take this unprecedented and powerful collection of 1.2 million individual voices and make sure that it becomes the driving force behind sustained local, national and global change.

MOST RESPONSES
The responses are a revelation; what counts now is action.

What Women Want shows wide demand and the common desire—no matter where a woman or girl lives—to be heard and meaningfully acknowledged, alongside healthcare that includes: respectful and dignified care; water, sanitation and hygiene; medicines and supplies; increase competent and better supported midwives and nurses; and increased, fully functional and closer facilities. Women are no longer waiting patiently for change. They are agitating for it.

Will you listen and act?
What Women Want Action Agenda

The What Women Want Action Agenda was designed in consultation with What Women Want focal points, partners and women and girls in India, Kenya, Malawi, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Tanzania and Uganda. The agenda takes the top five asks globally, which correspond to many of the top asks in these countries, and turn them into key action items that will bring about changes in services and programs that women and girls want and will use.

By 2022, health leaders both globally and within What Women Want focus countries will commit and act to:

WHAT WOMEN WANT | ACTION AGENDA
Asking "what do women want?" took perseverance on the part of thousands around the world. Answering it took courage and honesty from more than a million more.

Delivering on it takes meaningful commitment from you.

How then does the world respond to all those women (and men) who asked, and who answered? We must act on what they said. Whether one of the more than 350 partners who endorsed the campaign at its inception or new to What Women Want—now is the time to act. Now is the time to ask if your work truly reflects the self-articulated needs of the communities in which you work, and fully incorporate women’s and girls’ asks into action agendas, policies, programs and services.

Realizing the What Women Want Action Agenda requires a concerted effort among advocates, development agencies, community organizations, donors, journalists, policymakers, service providers, women, girls and their families and neighbors, among others.

Tell us how you are answering women’s and girls’ call.

Please complete the following relevant worksheets that capture your or your organization’s commitment to providing What Women Want and send your responses to:

They say, when the moon is full pulling the tide into itself, the ocean bulges, swells a woman’s belly, and breaks her water.

This story begins, like all myths, with a woman’s body. Inside her body is the earth, a birth that changes everything.

There’s a storm brewing, a wayward wind kicking up the dust of what was buried.

It sounds like a million moving tongues.

The women are talking, voices raised in unison to one radical question: “What do you want?”

The answer, a righteous thunder that cracks the shell of secrets, of shame.

We call in the truth from the shadows, give it a name.

There’s a tide turning, and in its wake, the debris of a culture of silence. A movement is born and it changes everything.

Every voice, counted. Every story, sacred. The truth is a balm and we speak our own healing.

Kesiime is talking, about a baby born on a forest floor under the cover of night, with a pack of hyena’s circling.

Catherine knows, how a child mothers her own child. What it means to start over at 19, and reclaim her story for her daughter.

Ask Rehnaz and Zeenat, about girls with no childhood

Ask Matilda, how to chase 10,000 how knowledge returns the girls to their rightful bodies

Ask Halima, about loss.

Or Habiba about the knotted rope of grief; one end tethered to the living, the other held firmly in the curled hand of the ones we have lost.

Or my own mother, born between the pew and the pulpit, her mother’s water breaking on hallowed ground. One hand raised in worship, the other catching the baby and the blood.

Praise the women, the glory and grace of our survival.

Praise the warriors who keep watch. Who have always known to guard our bodies. Who learnt the currency of “no” before our first words.

Praise the chorus of women talking, of women taking, after generations of giving, our stories back, our bodies back ours and ours alone.

We say yes, and we are heard. We say no and everything screeches to a halt.

Hear us now, in the ivory towers, in the boardrooms and the courtrooms.

Who holds the power? Whose hands write the laws that make a prison of our bodies?

We undo the chains by the power of our truth-telling.

The women are talking, and we are not afraid of wanting rest, to be kept whole, for kindness in our care, and help within our reach, choice without judgment.

We have already done the unthinkable have already dug deep into something as primal as survival.

In India, Kenya In Bulgaria, America In Nigeria, Uganda

Across the globe the women are talking. How radical it is to listen. How revolutionary it is to answer.
LISTENACT

Listening to women is a radical act.
But acting on what we hear is revolutionary.
